I found an article I would like to read but it is not fulltext in the database so how do I get this article?

I pasted the title of the ARTICLE in to the search box for the Online Catalog with the indicator ti: to indicate the database is to look for a title.

Huntington University RichLyn Library does not have immediate access to this article but you can request it on InterLibrary Loan. Click on the title of the article for more information.
When you click on the hyperlinked title you will get this screen. Click on the “Request Interlibrary Loan” button.

Fill out the form using your HU email address and we will request the article for you, free of charge, and send it to you through your email.

OR...
Sometimes you will be able to copy the title of the article or document and put it in the URL line and search it on the Internet. You might be able to find the article or document full text online.

Because the subject of biofuels runs rampant on the Internet I wanted to add the author’s name so we could get the right records. The actual document cited in the database is the first to come up on these results.

I became interested in this result because it was updated to 2011 but it studies the United Kingdom only.

However, I am also really interested in this article. It is a 2013 document and though it only deals with the European Union there is some very good research in the document.